

Abstract

A method of encapsulating an article having first and second surfaces, includes positioning the article on a carrier such that at least a portion of the first surface contacts the carrier. A portion of the carrier carrying the article is then positioned within a mold and a seal is formed between the mold and the carrier. The mold is then filled with an encapsulating material to form a seal between the article and the carrier.